Camille JeBran: The Heart Behind a Family Legacy

Trans-Bridge Lines' founding member passes away at 108 years old.

For more than eight decades, Camille Ferraro JeBran was an important part of the Trans-Bridge Lines story. From the company's founding in 1941 to its 85th anniversary in 2026, Camille remained a devoted member of the family business and a constant source of wisdom, strength and family tradition.

Camille was born in the Bronx on January 26, 1918, the oldest of four children of Alfred John "AJ" and Ida Ferraro. At just 14 years old, she began typing and taking shorthand for her father during business meetings.

Camille JeBran

A Lifetime of Leadership

In 1941, Camille, her father AJ, and her brother John founded Trans-Bridge Lines in Broadway, NJ. That small family venture would become the foundation of a transportation legacy that continues today.

In early 1944, she relocated to Phillipsburg, NJ. Not long afterward, Trans-Bridge Lines moved to Phillipsburg and eventually established its home in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania.

Camille's involvement with the company never faded. She served as Corporate Secretary while also working in the accounting office. She later took over accounting and payroll for Tri-City Coach Lines in Bethlehem, an affiliated company of Trans-Bridge Lines.

When the companies joined together in 1981, Camille remained in the accounting department and also took on responsibility for personnel. She continued handling personnel as the company grew, eventually transitioning those responsibilities to a dedicated Human Resources Manager.

Tom, James, Camille, and Jim JeBran

In 1990, Camille, her husband Jim, and their sons Tom and Jim became the company's sole owners. Under their leadership, Trans-Bridge Lines grew into one of Pennsylvania's largest bus companies.

Camille remained Corporate Secretary until her passing, attending weekly management meetings until the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020. After that time, she continued receiving company reports and updates and completed office work remotely.

Her influence went far beyond her title. Through accounting, payroll, personnel and management, Camille played a hands-on role in the company's growth and became a treasured part of its institutional memory.

Quietly Breaking Barriers

Camille's career reflected a changing era for women in business and transportation. She built a professional life while raising a family and helping lead a transportation company in an industry where women were often underrepresented in leadership.

She was a member of the Bethlehem Professional Women's Association and served a term as its president. She was also a member of Quota Club International.

In 2018, at age 100, Camille traveled to Charlotte, NC, to accept the American Bus Association's Women in Buses Award, recognizing contributions to the motorcoach industry.

A Life Beyond the Office

While Trans-Bridge Lines was an important part of Camille's life, it wasn't the whole story. She and her husband, Jim, traveled throughout the United States, Europe and Asia. They enjoyed cruising, bus trips, winters in Marco Island, FL, and vacations at the Jersey Shore.

Camille also enjoyed dancing, acting in plays, singing in her church choir, golfing, roller skating, horseback riding and going to the movies. She was an avid Philadelphia Eagles fan.

A Legacy That Moves Forward

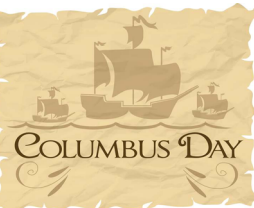

Camille's legacy can be seen in a family business that continues more than eight decades after its founding and in the generations of family members who followed her into the company — now in its fifth generation.

Camille was there at the beginning. She helped build the company through both leadership and the everyday work that kept the business moving. Her knowledge, dedication and family values will remain part of Trans-Bridge Lines for generations to come.

October Is Breast Cancer Awareness Month

Every October, communities across the country come together to recognize Breast Cancer Awareness Month — a time to raise awareness, encourage early detection and show support for those affected by breast cancer.

Breast cancer is one of the most common cancers among women, but awareness and advances in screening and treatment have helped improve outcomes for many people. October provides an opportunity to learn more about breast health and the importance of talking with a healthcare provider about individual screenings.

Awareness Starts With Action

Knowing what is normal for your body can be an important part of breast health. Changes such as a new lump, swelling, skin changes, nipple changes or unusual discharge should be discussed with a healthcare professional. Many breast cancers, however, cause no noticeable symptoms in their early stages, which is why recommended screening is an important part of early detection.

Mammograms remain an important screening tool for detecting breast cancer, particularly before symptoms appear. Screening recommendations can vary based on age, personal and family history, and other risk factors, so individuals should talk with their healthcare provider about what is appropriate for them.

Supporting Those Affected

Breast Cancer Awareness Month is also about recognizing the many people touched by the disease — those undergoing treatment, survivors, caregivers, family members, friends and loved ones.

A diagnosis can affect far more than one person. Offering a listening ear, helping with everyday responsibilities, accompanying someone to an appointment or simply letting someone know they are not alone can make a meaningful difference.

A Reminder This October

Breast Cancer Awareness Month is a reminder that awareness doesn't have to end when October does. Take time to learn about breast health, follow recommended screenings and encourage the people you care about to do the same.

Whether through education, early detection, support or research, every effort helps move us toward a future where fewer families are affected by breast cancer.
